Funding effort begins

The Appomattox FFA Alumni Association launched a drive to purchase a land site adjoining the Appomattox County High School as a land laboratory.

"The goal for the drive has been established at $22,000," announced R. B. Carter, current chairman of the FFA Alumni Association.

The site for the land laboratory is owned by Fred Jones, owner of Fred Jones Well Drilling Company, located in Appomattox. Approximately 20 acres of land will be used by the deparments of vocational agriculture for instructional purposes.

Projected plans will include demonstration plots for forestry, crops, and livestock, soil, water and wildlife conservation and a nature trail.

W. C. Perrow, vice chairman of the association states, "the location of the land conveniently to the high school makes the site valuable for the instructional program. It really will be a valuable asset."

W. C. Dudley, a member of the special committee seeking to raise funds for the purchase agrees that it is a very ambitious project.

"We will need a lot of support to secure the money, but I believe that our alumni members, former FFA members, and friends of the FFA will accomplish our objective," stated Dudley as he viewed the plot for the land lab which has been explained in a brochure developed as a promotional item.

Henry Pack, another alumni member is most optimistic about the project.

"Sure it's a big project, but the FFA is known for taking on big challenges. We will need contributions of any size. We believe that the people who live and work in this community will support the project," indicates Pack, former vocational agriculture instructor and former mayor.

Sammy Martin, farmer and businessman, and an executive committee member of the Alumni Association believes that former FFA members who live within and outside the county will be very supportive of the project.

"I know how the FFA helped me and I'm sure that every member has had similar experiences," commented Martin who has had several leadership opportunities with the Young Farmers of Virginia since leaving the high school.

"The FFA has a lot of friends in Appomattox and over the State of Virginia," says Marvin House, vice president and branch manager of Central Fidelity Bank in Appomattox as well as treasurer of the association.

"We will be counting on the agri-businesses in the area to help promote this project which will mean much toward improving the excellence of the vocational agriculture program," states "Bo" House as he is known to his many friends.

Individuals and companies who give a donation toward the purchase of the land will have their names engraved on a suitable plaque to be displayed in the vo-ag department at the Appomattox County High School.

STUDENTS IN GRADES FOUR AND FIVE at Concord Elementary School raised more than $2,000 for the American Heart Association in a "Jump Rope for Heart" physical education program last month. Sixty-one children vigorously jumped rope during their phys-ed classes, after getting monetary pledges from members of the community for the amount of time spent jumping rope. Mr. Lee Carter, shown here with some of the students who participated, coordinated the event as physical education teacher at the school. The total collected was $2,075.52.

Local home is topic of new book

By FRANCES PAULETTE

"Writing and hard work are nothing new to me," said Richard L. Guild, Appomattox County resident who has just published a new history book.

Guild's book, Mt. Comfort Plantation, A History and Description of an Authentic Colonial Virginia Home shows his love for his home and for colonial history.

Guild, who was born October 29, 1944 in Bethel Park, Pennsylvania, owns a small business which is engaged in the marketing of environmental test instruments, a vocation which he has been working in since he was 18 years old.

His father, Lloyd Guild, a well known research chemist, got Richard started in the instrument business, working part time during summer vacation from school. He has been at the business ever since.

As a little boy, Guild's health was poor, and his parents, very much concerned for the welfare of their son, took him to the mountains of western Pennsylvania every summer from 1945 through 1957 where he thoroughly enjoyed visiting his Pennsylvania Dutch grandparents. It was while here that his love for the country began to grow.

"I loved every minute of my time there," smiled Guild as he recalled his childhood.

"My grandfather owned a 1943 pick-up truck. We'd fill that old truck up with fresh garden corn and away we'd go selling corn, door to door. I was about six or seven then and Grandfather always sent me to the door!" said Guild. "And the people bought!"

"I was crushed when my grandfather died," said Guild. "The old farm home place had to be sold and it was then that I made a vow that some day, somehow, I would own a farm like my grandfather had."

Graduating from high school in 1962, Guild entered the University of Arizona School of Engineering in Tuscon, Arizona. His college career was short lived; he had to quit after only a year and a half. Because there was a shortage of money, he moved in with his parents and went ot work for his father. In 1964, he entered the University of Pittsburg School of Business Administration. It was necessary that he attend classes at night and work during the day in order to pay his tuition.

"They were lean years, and I worked hard, but I made it just fine," commented Guild.

It was in 1972 that Guild started a business of his own, selling the instruments that his father manufactured.

In 1974 Richard married Miss Hope Harris, a southern girl, who was born in Franklin, Virginia with relatives in Lynchburg. Her father was born in Concord, and reared in Lynchburg.

"She was always trying to talk me into moving to Virginia," said Richard with a smile. "And, you know, now that I'm here I love it."

In 1979, after selling his Pennsylvania based business, Guild moved to Appomattox and purchased the old Dean Johns home known as Mt. Comfort.

"It has been a bit difficult getting another business going,"said Guild, "we really had to work at it but the Lord has blessed us."

Richard and Hope, both devout Christians, have been actively involved in church youth work since 1975. They kept three foster children for nearly three years, and taught more than 200 junior high children at church youth meetings while they were in Pennsylvania. Here in Virginia they have tried to continue their youth work and have kept several young people and children in their home. They are members of the Fairview Christian Church in Lynchburg where Guild is an officer and a deacon. Hope Guild is an accomplished pianist and singer and uses her talents at area revival services.

The Guilds enjoy colonial history and have decorated their home with beautiful antique furniture.

"Most of our furniture was purchased at flea markets or auctions and restored," commented Guild. "We didn't have much money when we first got married."

Regardless of how they acquired their antiques, they seem to fit perfectly into the setting of the historic old Dean Johns' home, Mt. Comfort.

RICHARD L. GUILD is shown in front of "Mt. Comfort," the subject of a book he recently published. An open house will be featured at the newly restored Appomattox County home this Saturday from 1-5 p.m.

Raining Monday morning as I face the old portable typewriter. Okeh. Means no big rush to get into the garden and got more plants and seed into the ground. Rain will help save the ones already there and I can water the plants still in the basement awaiting their turn. But there is much to be done and everyone should have a list of "things to be done on a rainy day."

Time is like a rubber band. Some moments you would like to stretch out, extending to the fullest every precious second. Then, idle time like an idle rubber band seems useless. But the potential is there. It is the use you make of it that counts.

Read recently of a prominent Southern Senator who remarked in a speech that his father "was with Lee at Appomattox." No explanation or details. Just "With Lee at Appomattox." But there could be lots of explanstion, such as staying with a Cause, loyal to the Leader, holding the ranks, sharing with one companions. Leads me to say that few episodes in all history are treated with more respect than the Peace at Appomattox in 1865 and we here at Appomattox are caretakers, custodians, guardians.

Big news just now in the assortment of events coming up with the end of another school term. Something every moment. And Moment Uno, the Big Number One, is getting that diploma or promotion.

Notepad: Bill Britton, our Town and County Administrator, makes a fine impression on TV. Saw him on a recent interview.

Sunday afternoon I made a short tour, driving only a few miles, but liking what I saw. At the Old Court House area saw nine tour buses & lots of cars in the National Park Service area. License plates from Wisconsin, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, etc. Chatted with several visitors. One couple from Philadelphia said they had been to see their son in Roanoke and added the side trip to Appomattox to see the Peace Site./"while in Virginia." Music to my ears. And tourists taking pictures. One lady was telling her daughter to "smile pretty now, you are at Appomattox." Bet she took that picture with her to school this week to show her history teacher!

Bumblebee time. Two in my car in front of the post office, and a friend helped dispatch'em. Correction: the friend dispatched 'em, while I looked on. But later on my own got two hornets on my porch.

Lots of yard sales. Saw half a dozen in progress over the week-end. Thanks for reading and seeya around.

TORNADO-LIKE WINDS uprooted several large trees on the Appomattox County farm of Shelby Tucker Saturday afternoon. The storm, which also knocked bricks out of Tucker's chimney and ripped the tops out of several trees near his house, hit around 4 p.m. Tucker, shown here examining one of the uprooted trees, said the storm did only light damage to his property, despite its ferocity. Mother Nature continued her bizarre Springtime behavior this week, as temperatures dipped into the frost range at night. (Photo by Bill Sherrod)
